

Richard Stanley
Georgia Cattleman

Are injuries or health conditions keeping you from farming?

When farm families and workers become ill or injured, man hours that are crucial to the operation of the farm are lost. This is when we can help. We provide information and services that may make it possible to return to farming.

“Without their assistance I would not be back at work. They gave me the boost I needed to carry on.”
- Richard Stanley, Georgia Cattleman

Farm Again's AgrAbility project is a free service that focuses on promoting independence for members of the agricultural community who have health conditions or injuries. We provide direct assistance through assistive technology assessments, work site modifications and independent living skill recommendations.

Call Toll Free: 1-877-524-6264

Email: farmagain@uga.edu

Visit us on the web: www.farmagain.com

The program is managed by the University of Georgia's Cooperative Extension Service in the College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences and the Institute on Human Development and Disability in the College of Family and Consumer Sciences. AgrAbility is funded by the USDA.

FARM AGAIN
AgrAbility
in georgia